Four months into his eternal assignment, the routine has settled into a grim, unyielding rhythm, far removed from the grand halls of Tehran.

The Morning "Awakening" and Labor

The day does not begin with the call to prayer, but with the grating sound of iron chains. At 04:00 AM, the labor portion of the sentence commences. Stripped of his robes and formal turbans, Khamenei is forced into manual labor under the oppressive, sweltering heat of the underworld. His tasks involve dredging the thick, sulfurous mud that floors the subterranean chambers, moving heavy stones, and clearing the endless debris of fallen monuments.

Mealtimes

Breakfast, lunch, and dinner blend into a single, recurring mockery of a banquet, captured vividly in their shared dining quarters.

- The Menu: True to the visual reality of the underworld, the silver platters and fine dining of earthly life are replaced by cracked wooden tables overflowing with mud, writhing earthworms, and giant cockroaches.
- The Company: Dining is a forced communal affair alongside other deposed rulers and historical figures, such as Muammar Gaddafi, who sits opposite him in a soiled, tattered military uniform.
- The Overseer: Every bite is taken under the watchful, mocking gaze of a rotund, red demon seated on a stone throne at the head of the room, ensuring that every plate of insects and sludge is thoroughly consumed.

"Devil Worshipping" and Inversion of Rituals

The most psychological aspect of the punishment involves the total inversion of his earthly devotion. Instead of leading congregations, he is subjected to mandatory periods of submission to the dark forces of the realm.

- This forced "worship" is not a choice, but a mandated ritual where he must bow before the demonic hierarchy, acknowledging the absolute authority of the underworld's ruler.
- The sacred chants he spent a lifetime reciting are twisted into discordant, chaotic frequencies, serving as a constant reminder of the regime's earthly actions and final judgment.